March brought a roller coaster ride in equities and signs of distress in the credit markets as the coronavirus pandemic intensified outside of East Asia and prompted unprecedented public health measures and economic policy responses. Global equity markets declined sharply, with particular pressure on energy and financials. The US Dollar appreciated against major currencies, with huge intra-month volatility. Commodities declined across the board, even gold traded lower as traders had to raise cash to fund margin calls.

The portfolio ended the month in negative territory as the majority of the managers deducted. Event Driven strategies were impacted by the heightened market volatility, M&A spreads widening and further technical elements. Long/Short Equity managers – in aggregate – were negative albeit with losses significantly smaller than equity markets and two managers even in positive territory. Within Relative Value, convertible bonds arbitrage suffered the most. As for systematic strategies, quant macro deducted while trend-following were able to capitalize on some trends and ended the month in positive territory.

All annualised and cumulative statistics are for the period commencing Jan 1997.
