Global financial markets gave back in September, as renewed fears of COVID-countermeasures as well as political uncertainty around the 2020 US election weighed on markets. Especially large technology names gave back some of the gains from earlier in the year, while defensive sectors like utilities and consumer staples lost significantly less than the market. While rates remained stable, the US Dollar has appreciated in value against major currencies, breaking the trend of previous months. Commodities also broke their previous uptrend and declined broadly, with the exception of agricultures.

The portfolio ended the month in slight negative territory with contributions across styles in a narrow range. Largest contribution came from Relative Value where all the managers performed positively. Within Long/Short Equity, results were mixed with positive contributions from European and Asian managers, while US managers deducted. Event Driven strategies had also a mixed month, leading – on aggregate terms – to a marginal deduction at portfolio level. Within Systematic Strategies, trend-following strategies deducted while Quantitative Macro approaches were profitable and partially offset losses.
