Equities and credit regained momentum during most of July, as equity volatility fell below June's level. Additional economic support measures and research progress for a vaccine outweighed the rising COVID-19 cases in the US and a number of flare-ups in other regions. Rates declined across the globe while the US Dollar depreciated against major currencies. Commodities picked up during the month, as the unprecedented monetary stimuli bring back inflationary expectations.

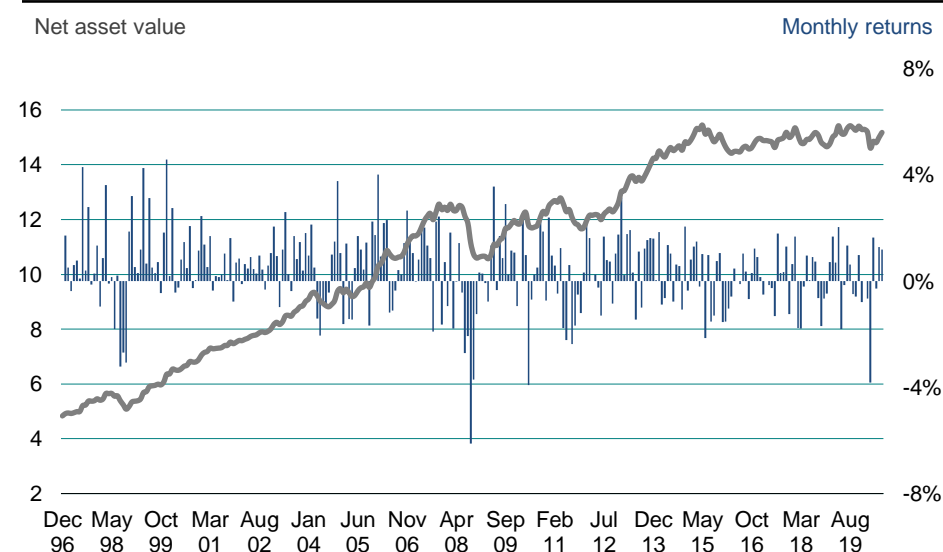

The portfolio ended the month in positive territory with almost every manager being profitable. The largest contribution came from Long/Short Equity, with all but one manager posting good results across geographies and trading styles. Within Relative Value, we saw the highest dispersion with best results from a convertible bond arbitrage manager in the US. Within systematic strategies both Trend-Following and Quant Equity strategies posted solid returns. Event Driven was positive in aggregate and added to the overall portfolio results.
