Global financial markets showed mixed results in April as geopolitical tensions related to trade wars impacted market sentiment, especially at the beginning of the month. Towards the end of the month, markets calmed down as US and China as well as North and South Korea signaled intentions to work on constructive discussions. In equities, gains were mainly concentrated in the energy sector as the oil price reached a three year high. US rates trended higher during the month and the US Dollar appreciated against major currencies.

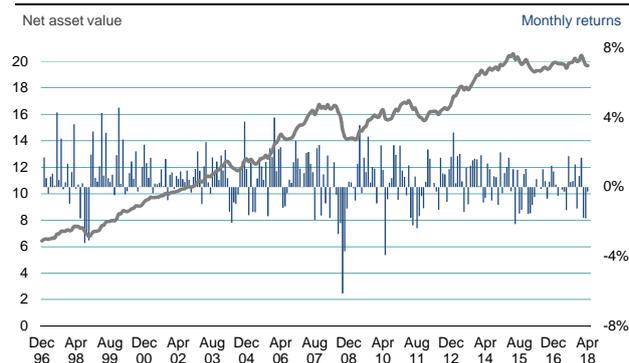

The portfolio ended the month flat with results across strategies in a narrow range. The highest contributions came from CTA/Global Macro and Relative Value strategies. Within CTAs trading in energy and rates drove performance and more than offset losses in equities and currencies. Long/Short Equity managers had a mixed month with some significant dispersion also within single regions leading to a roughly flat contribution overall. The Event Driven allocation detracted with a European manager in particular weighing negatively on performance.
