December brought another positive month in equity and credit markets. Interest rates tended higher, while the euro and yuan were firm against the US dollar. Health authorities around the world launched inoculation campaigns against COVID-19, helping to further broaden gains to sectors that had been left behind in earlier phases of the pandemic. Commodity prices continued to increase, led by metals and agricultural products.

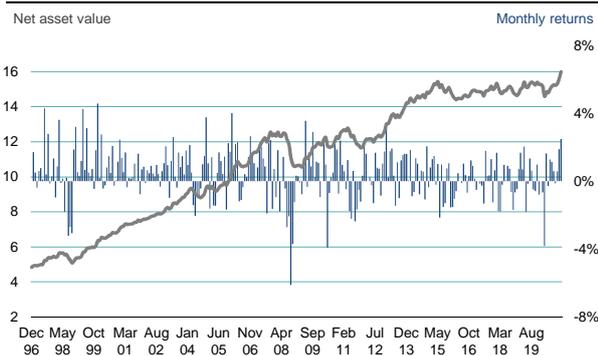

The portfolio posted a solid return with all main styles contributing positively. Strongest contribution came from the Long/Short Equity allocation, where all managers were positive across regions and trading styles. The Relative Value allocation performed strongly as well, with best results from a US based manager. Event Driven strategies had a mixed month but were – in aggregate – positive. Systematic strategies also performed well with best results from Trend-Following managers.
